NINEVEH: THE GLORY OF IRAQ'S PAST

The archaeology of Nineveh enjoys a long history, dating back to the 19th century with the likes of Claudius Rich (1820), Paul Botta (1842), and Henry Layard (1845). Leonard King worked at Nineveh at the beginning of the 20th century, then Campbell Thomas in 1927. Following World War II, excavations were picked up by the Iraqis and in the 1980s by David Stronach of UC Berkeley, along with two of his students, Diana Pickworth and Constance Gane.

THE MADABA PLAINS PROJECT

The Madaba Plains Project began with excavations at Tall Hisban (biblical Heshbon) in central Jordan in 1968. Twenty-six years ago in 1984, the project opened the site of Tall al-'Umayri, a layered-cake series of settlements rich in remains from 3,000 BC (dolmen tomb), 2400 BC (large city), 1600 BC (massive defense system), 1400 BC (well-preserved temple), 1200 BC (spectacular "four-room" house), 900 BC (another type of house), 600 BC (administrative center for wine production), and 150 BC (farmstead). In 1992 Tall Jalul began.
